

Division 4: John Longville Director

John Longville was appointed to the District's Board on September 24, 2007.

Director Longville first dealt with water issues more than three decades ago as a legislative assistant to the late Congressman George Brown, and continued to learn about water during his eighteen years as a councilmember (1978-84 & 1986-87) and then as mayor of Rialto (1987-98). He was also active in regional government organizations (including a term as president of the Southern California Association of Governments). His water education continued during his six years in the California State Assembly (1998-2004), he wrote 32 law – including California's first legislation addressing alluvial fan flood dangers – and one amendment to the State Constitution.

Director Longville currently teaches American Government at San Bernardino Valley College. He is a commissioner of the California Medical Assistance Commission, and has also served on the boards of many local civic and charitable organizations, including Arrowhead United Way, Inland AIDS Project, the American Cancer Society, and Option House (child and spouse-abuse shelter).
